The present invention relates to the utilization of the dew that is formed on awnings and other surfaces during the morning and evening hours of a warm summer day. It is known to cool the interior of a dwelling by causing an air current to flow through a ventilation system. Air is directed through a dehumidifier and is then conveyed into a living space of a dwelling to cool the air in the space. The dehumidifier functions to remove moisture from the air and is in operation most of the day when the interior of the dwelling is occupied. The dehumidifier then releases the air back into the dwelling through a vent in the roof of the dwelling. It is known to provide awnings that are supported by rafters, and from which a curtain is hung to cover the roof of a dwelling. When the dwelling is occupied, the curtain is rolled up during the day. As the sun sets, the awning is lowered and a dew shield is brought down to cover the awning. The dew shield is typically a sheet of plastic material having perforations therein through which air is expelled when the dew shield is raised and the air passes through the shield to the roof of the dwelling. The air is then blown back into the dwelling through vents in the roof. It is also known to provide a portable dehumidifier that can be used in a dwelling to remove moisture from air that is conveyed into the dwelling. TripAdvisor Reviews Delano Hotel Los Cabos Travel Blogs from San Jose del Cabo ... by the sea and the Pacific Ocean and the harbour and much more to see. For this excursion we headed for the Strip. This is a small area a few blocks from the beach with restaurants, bars and souvenir shops. The restaurants specialize in Mexican and European food and the bar patrons are mostly locals. It's a nice place to spend some time on a Sunday afternoon. We walked around and stopped at one restaurant to have lunch. They were doing an awesome job of cooking us dishes.... to the bus terminal which is the big white building in the centre 82157476af
